

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Jocelyn Davis

Jocelyn S. Davis is a management consultant, coach, and educator with expertise in helping individuals and organizations (corporate, government, and non-profit) improve their effectiveness. She brings a unique blend of financial, operational, governance, and organizational development experience to her work. She is widely recognized for her expertise in applying the principles of Positive Psychology to creating a great place to work.

Ms. Davis is the founder of Nelson Hart LLC, a professional services firm which provides consulting and educational services to organizations: strategic planning, governance, organizational development, leadership, and executive coaching. She helps leaders and managers invest the time to know themselves: their strengths and their lesser strengths, their interests, and their passions using principles of positive psychology championed by Dr. Martin Seligman of the University of Pennsylvania, the Gallup Organization, and many others in the field.

Ms. Davis is an adjunct instructor at the University of Maryland, Clark School of Engineering Project Management Center for Excellence, where she teaches Managing Project Teams and The Evolving Project Leader. She presents on the topic of positive psychology—flourishing individuals yielding thriving organizations—to audiences globally.

She has previously been published in the Oxford University Handbook of Positive Psychology and Work (edited by Linley and Harrington, published in 2013) and in the Gower Handbook of People in Projects (edited by Lock and Scott, published in 2013). Her contributions to anthologies have focused on the education of technical managers to become outstanding leaders of people.

Ms. Davis is a graduate of the College of William and Mary in Williamsburg, Virginia. She practiced for many years as a certified public accountant.