from the Publishers

First, we want to acknowledge and thank our authors. The authors come from an incredibly diverse set of backgrounds, professional fields, and leadership angles, yet their work has come together beautifully—and not a single author wavered in professionalism, character, or good humor throughout this book’s creation. It’s no surprise that they are leaders in life and at work, and we feel smarter and wiser for having worked with them.

Many thanks also to Sharon Armstrong of the SAA Trainers and Consultants Network, a free referral service for HR, OD, trainers, coaches, and keynote speakers. Sharon is a HR consultant and author, and she was very helpful to us as we began to develop this anthology. She can be reached at (202) 333-0644 or online at www.trainersandconsultants.net.

Lastly, we would like to thank the other authors in Red Letter Publishing’s Professional Series anthologies, including, most recently, Rethinking Human Resources. They have shared with one another the special discourses of reading and writing, of professional learning, and of kinship, and it’s a privilege to grow this community as the Professional Series goes forward.

This is a book about leadership, but as you’ll find in the pages that follow, it’s not about standing at the top; it’s about finding the best path to the top and helping others to climb it with you. If the authors taught us something, it’s this: that the power we call leadership must have a soul, that it must belong to someone’s heart and mind alone before it can be shared. These lessons once belonged to someone alone—and now, they can be shared with you.
